Porsche LMP 2000

Dear friends,

Back at the turn of the century, an open sports prototype was built at Weissach and given the project name LMP 2000, to reflect the category in which this car was to compete at Le Mans, among other events.
Before the first kilometres could be completed on the company's test track, Porsche bosses called a halt to all work on the car because the regulations for the LMP class had changed.

But not all was lost: later, the monocoque and the V10 engine installed behind the driver would give rise to the Carrera GT road sports car.

Best regards
